Document all elements of competency validation for this particular competency:

Make any needed changes to the

1. Validation Method(s): you can select more than one method (select all methods that were used)
2. Rating: Select competent, not competent, or not applicable.
3. Validation Date: Select the date the competency was actually validated. *Remember, all orientation competencies should not be documented as being validated on the same date, but rather actual dates of validation that occurred throughout the 90-day orientation period should be documented (exception—contract staff who are validated over 2-3 days).

individual skills/steps of the competency.

Underneath each competency, there is a skills box. Notice that you can click on the drop-down arrow next to skills to see all of the skills/steps that should be validated by the coach when validating a competency. Whatever validation method, rating, and validation date you selected above at the competency level will also populate for each skill that falls beneath the competency (designed to make competency documentation quicker). However, you may need to make some changes. Encourage your coaches to review each skill when validating competencies and make any needed changes to validation method, rating, and validation date. It is very possible that some of the skills were validated on different days using different validation methods. If the validation method is a training certificate or paper checklist, it can be uploaded as learner evidence.
